Students for One Health Logo

The One Health Commission is pleased to announce that we have a new logo!

The logo was created by Elizabeth M. Gentry, MEd, MPH, Executive Director of SOH, and was the ideal fusion of students, medicine, and global health.

Vote for the Students for One Health Logo!

Students from all over the world entered the Students for One Health logo competition this September. Now it is up to us to choose the winner. Use your vote for you!

1. For more on our logo design:

- One vote submission per person. Only students are allowed to vote.
- We would like to limit these votes to students on the Students for One Health website and e-mails received in one health@onehealth.com.
- If you submitted a design, please do not self-promote. We want the vote to be fair and we do not want to be biased on the design.
- The One Health Commission suggested that the design incorporate the One Health Commission logo. We do not have a requirement.
- There are a handful of submissions that are identical. These designs will be reviewed by a professional design firm to ensure that they are unique and the work on the design team (we present your work in your name).
- Some of the designs needed to be revised for some purposes. If you would like to see how to use your design to see how the design process works, please email: onehealth@onehealth.com.

All types of emerging infectious diseases that threaten people worldwide are unique zoonotic (transmit between humans and animals) or vector-borne (carried from insects) zoonotic diseases. These diseases are caused by a variety of pathogens, including viruses, bacteria, fungi, parasites, and prions. Some diseases are spread from one animal to another, some from animals to humans, and some from humans to humans. Some diseases are spread from one animal to another, some from animals to humans, and some from humans to humans. Some diseases are spread from one animal to another, some from animals to humans, and some from humans to humans.

In addition, the environment affects human and animal health. Environmental changes and pollution (caused by people) can contribute to the development of new zoonotic diseases. Change change and environmental disruption for agriculture and natural resource extraction may lead to zoonotic exposure to new zoonotic diseases and emerging infectious agents.

The Charter of the One Health Commission

Dear PHOHC and OHC Colleagues:

As an exciting step toward the One Health Commission (OHC) becoming part of your organization, we have been pleased to announce the recent development of a global administrative framework to support its mission in Science, Creativity, and Education for One Health.

Over the past few years, the Commission has focused on creating interdisciplinary connections and collaboration by engaging our constituencies, developing the One Health International (OHI) network, and creating training opportunities for students for One Health (OHC) on its Board of Directors.

As a past and/or present sponsor of the Commission, we would like to draw your attention to the Charter of the One Health Commission. The Charter is a key document that defines the OHC's mission, vision, and values, and provides a framework for the OHC's operations and activities. We encourage you to review the Charter and provide your input and feedback to the OHC's Board of Directors.
